The accompanying Leadership Workbook was developed as a six-month applied leadership practice program for managers and teams. In her work, she emphasizes that leadership can be learned but requires emotional intelligence, relational awareness, and the capacity to create environments that value, care for, and encourage people to thrive.

Her leadership voice is recognized on international stages. In 2025, she was invited to speak at the Women's Pavilion by Cartier at EXPO Osaka on the role of women's leadership in creating sustainable societies. She also delivered a keynote for the International Bar Association's Global Entrepreneurship Conference in Milan and participated as a member of the German government delegation at the Commission on the Status of Women (CSW) at the United Nations Headquarters in New York. In 2024, she received a Professional Doctorate in Business Leadership, awarded at a formal ceremony at the House of Lords in London. Dr. Bonacossa's work consistently advocates for a leadership model rooted in humanity, responsibility, and co-creation. She believes that leaders shape not only organizations, but lives, and therefore hold a profound responsibility to lead with awareness, integrity, and care.
